In one study, Sarah Pressman and Sheldon Cohen studied autobiographies written by study participants including psychologists, poets, and novelists. They counted the number of relational words that people used in their autobiographies, words like father, brother, or sister, as well as pronouns like we. Pressman and Cohen then proved the connection between how often people used relational words and how long they lived. They found that the authors who heavily mentioned social roles in their life stories lived, on average, five years longer than those who did not.

Emotions are an important psychological tool for an infant's survival. By expressing emotion, infants communicate essential information about their comfort and well-being as well as their immediate needs. Although infants are born with an emotional system in place, it is fairly simple at birth. Newborns only show two kinds of emotion, distress and calm. These are global emotional states, not like the complex emotions of an adult. Within the first six months, however, infants begin to show signs of distinct emotions. Through their facial expressions, vocalizations, and body movements, infants express joy, sadness, anger, surprise, and fear.

Snowy owls build their nests in the Arctic tundra of the northernmost areas of Alaska and Canada and Eurasia. They hunt during the day and have two different colors of feathers depending upon the season. In summer, the feathers are brownish with dark spots and stripes, while in winter, they are completely white. During the spring breeding season, they feed on eggs of geese and swans which are much larger than they are. Their nest is made of dried tundra plants. Snowy owls lay 5-8 eggs at a time and the eggs look very much like the surface of the tundra. In winter, they do not fly south, but stay at any place where there is food to eat.

Two years ago, Green County Library decided to stay open until 8 p.m. every Thursday. This was to make library services available to people for whom evening was the only convenient time to visit. However, visitor numbers have not shown a strong demand for the later hours, and library officials determined that staff time would be more effectively utilized by adjusting operating hours. So I have to inform you that hours of operation at Green County Library will change starting October 8, 2015. Operating hours on Thursdays will return to normal, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.. All normal library services will still be available during those hours. Additionally, the shift will allow Green County Library to improve and increase services to the community.

Writing scientific papers can be very stressful even for the best writers. However, taking a suitable approach can make the task manageable. All you have to keep in mind is that you are writing to communicate, not to impress. I saw many students use a flowery style in their scientific papers. You need to be aware that readers of scientific papers want to know what you did, what you found, and what it means; they are not seeking great literary merit. If you do good research and present it clearly, you will satisfy the readers. In scientific papers, readers pay attention to the content, not the style.

A basic principle of economics is that if something becomes more costly, people will be ①less likely to buy it. This principle is called the law of demand. The law of demand says that there is a negative relationship between the price of a good or service and the quantity of it that consumers are ②willing to buy. This relationship means that price and the quantity consumers wish to buy move in ③opposite directions. As the price increases, buyers buy less—and as the price decreases, buyers buy more. The availability of substitutes—goods that perform ④different functions—helps explain this relationship. No single good is absolutely essential; everything can be replaced with something else. Wood, aluminum, and bricks can take the place of steel. When the price of a good ⑤increases, people cut back on their purchases of it and turn to substitute products.

Why do geese fly in a V-shaped form? As each bird flaps its wings, the wind it makes lifts the bird that follows behind. The geese gather lift from one another. This helps the geese travel faster. Life is like a mosaic that appears to be a harmonious image only when viewed from a distance. Up close, you see more details, and the picture gets less continuous. If you come even closer, it becomes obvious that the entire picture consists of countless little pieces. And if you lean in close so that the tip of your nose nearly touches the mosaic, the picture disappears altogether. Only its components, the little pieces, fill your field of vision. It is no longer possible to figure out what they mean. Every moment is one mosaic piece of life. And just as we look at a mosaic as a picture from a distance, we should remain distant from the all-important moments that add up to the sum total of our lives.

To have a better understanding of the ___(A)___, you have to stay ___(B)___ its individual moments.

I once read an interesting fact based on research, saying that every person can do at least one thing better than ten thousand other people. Think about that! You have an ability that can't be matched by anyone in your town or neighborhood or in your college. Have you discovered that ability? If you haven't, wouldn't you love it if someone came to you and pointed it out? How would you feel about that person? I bet you'd be pretty grateful. Heat a little water in a flask. When the water starts boiling, remove the flask away from the flame and fix a balloon on the mouth of the flask. Within few moments, you would observe the balloon _____. Why does it happen? When the flask is heated, the air in the flask also becomes hot along with the water. So the air expands and some of it goes out of the flask. And when the water starts boiling, some of it gets changed into steam, which pushes some more air out of the flask. Now, when a balloon is fixed on the mouth of the flask, it stops the passage of the air and the steam. So when you stop heating the flask, the steam in it becomes cool and gets changed into water. The air inside the flask too will become smaller, causing the pushed out air to return to fill the flask. But now the balloon is there to check it. So the outside air pushes the balloon inside the flask.

Hungry? How about a snack of beetle cookies, chocolate covered ants, or fried crickets? You are probably disgusted at the thought of eating bugs, but the truth is that you eat insects every day! There are insect parts in your peanut butter. There are grasshopper pieces in your pizza. There are bits of bugs in your candy bars. Almost all foods contain some insect parts. There is no way to keep food products insect-free. Each of us eats about two pounds of insect parts every year!

Around the world, insects are an important source of food. In Thailand, children catch tree beetles. These are fried as crunchy snacks. Ant eggs cooked in butter are common in Mexico. Bolivians eat roasted ants as though they were peanuts. Eating insects is not a bad idea. Insects are not only cheap, but they're also good for your health. They are a good source of minerals. They are low in calories. They are a good source of protein. They have a lot of vitamins and they have little fat.

They reproduce quickly. Unlike cattle and pigs, insects require little space to grow. Insect farming is environmentally friendly, and many insects can be grown without harming the land. Insects can even be grown on a space ship. For these reasons, insects are very easy to _____.

Bugs may be the food of the future! So, be prepared. Someday soon, when you order a burger, your waiter might ask you something like: "Do you want flies with that?"

If you looked at your skin under a microscope, you would see that it has many empty holes, where bits of grease can become stuck. When water alone is used to remove grease, water will simply sit on top of it in a bubble, and skin still stays dirty and oily. Add soap to that very same water and you have a completely different result. The action of mixing soap into water pumps air into the water and helps to create bubbles. While bubbles seem to be weak, they actually work like strong magnets. Just as magnets pull iron toward them, soap bubbles pick up grease and pull it away from the skin. Then these bubbles are carried away in the rinse water, _____.

It's easy to confuse income with wealth, because both are measured in dollars and both are sources of funds that can be spent on goods and services. However, they are not the (A)[same / right] thing. Your income is how much you earn per period of time (such as $3,500 per month or $40,000 per year). Your wealth, by contrast, is the value of what you own (B)[minus / plus] the value of what you owe at a particular moment. For example, on December 31, 2010, the value of what you own is $12,000, but the value of what you owe is $9,000, so you have $3,000 in wealth. To help you see the difference, suppose you get a good job after you graduate, but you have very little in the bank, and you still have large, unpaid student loans. Rama was very happy. (a)She had a new pair of shoes. Her shoes were blue with silver buckles just like she had wanted. Before going to bed, she set the shoes on the floor by the foot of her bed. She could not wait to wear them to school. The next morning, Rama jumped out of bed. (b)She pulled on her socks and looked for her shoes.

(B)

She ran into the backyard and looked into the doghouse. There was Sofie, which Rama was raising, and there was the missing blue shoe. The mystery was solved! Rama took the shoe out of the doghouse. It was dirty and the heel had been chewed on. Rama ran back into the house yelling, "Mom! Look what Sofie did to my shoe!"

(C)

Her left shoe was right where she had put it. "Where is my other shoe?" she said. Rama looked under the bed. She found an old boot. She found three socks. (c)She found her dog's toy bone, but there was no blue shoe. Rama looked all over the bedroom. She couldn't find the missing shoe. "This is a mystery," she said. "Where can that shoe be?"

(D)

Rama sat down to think about her problem. Maybe her little sister had taken the shoe. (d)She liked to walk around in Rama's shoes. No, she would have taken two shoes, not one. Had her elder brother taken the shoe? No, he stayed at a friend's house last night. Rama was sure he didn't take it. "What's that mess by the door?" said Rama. (e)She went to see what it was. There were dirty paw prints going out into the hall. "At last, a clue!" shouted Rama.

Mark Brown, the former television talk show host, had something of a reputation for giving politicians a hard time. He has said the reason he has little respect for them. Most politicians will do anything for some media attention, he says. In his autobiography, however, (a) he tells about an encounter with a politician who was different.

(B)

When he was struggling with his camera, the families of the trapped miners were gathered around. They were just simple mining people—women, old men, and children. Several of the trapped men were fathers. Then the local mayor arrived. He looked tough, and he didn't speak well at all. But (b) he came to each family member and gave a warm hug saying something nice and warm. As this was going on, Brown was still trying to get his camera to work, and he was incredibly frustrated because he couldn't film the scene.

(C)

It happened while Brown was a young television reporter in Ohio, and one day (c) he was sent to West Virginia in the bitter cold winter to cover a mine disaster. He went by himself in a little car, carrying a minicam to film the story. It was so cold when he got there, however, that the camera wouldn't work. So (d) he put it inside his coat to warm it up enough to run.

(D)

Finally, after the hugging was over, Brown managed to get his camera operating. So he told the mayor that (e) he had his camera work now and asked if he would hug family members again so he could film it for the evening news. The mayor, however, told Brown, "Young man, we don't hug for the news. I'm sorry, but I will not pose." To this day, Brown remembers that mayor with respect.

If you fail to use it, you are like a man who has millions of dollars in the bank, but no checkbook. Dress your child like John Elway. Does this make sense to you? As many people know, John Elway was a legendary football player for the Denver Broncos. His jersey had a deep-blue background with a bright-orange number 7 on it. Dressed in this jersey, your child will be easy to spot in a crowded place. If he is ever lost, the first question you will be asked is "What is he wearing?" It will be more efficient to describe him as a three-foot-tall version of John Elway than as "a cute little boy with brown hair and a beige T-shirt." The variation is also possible if your child has the bright-red jersey of the basketball star, Michael Jordan.
