- ◆ 표지에 이름을 적고 회차마다 문제를 푸 날짜를 꼭 적습니다.
- ◆ 1회분 6문제를 모두 푸는 시간은 실력에 맞춰 15~30분 정도로 정하면 됩니다.
- ◆ 채점은 다음과 같이 합니다.
  - 각 문제 번호에 맞은 문제는 ○표, 틀린 문제는 √표를 합니다.
  - 맞은 갯수를 좌측 상단 표의 HITS 옆 칸에 적습니다.
  - 틀린 문제는 맞을 때까지 최소 2회 더 풀어봅니다.
  - 다시 풀어 맞은 문제에는 ○표를 추가합니다.
  - 처음에 틀렸던 문제는 답지를 참고해 반드시 오답 노트를 합니다. 오답 노트는 문제 옆에 논리적으로 적습니다.
⇒ 오답 노트를 하는 과정은 문제 푸는 논리를 내 것으로 만드는 과정입니다.
  - 여러 회차의 시험지가 모이면, 자신이 약한 문제 유형을 확인할 수 있습니다.
보강이 필요한 유형은 《코어셋 CORE SET》 시리즈를 통해 해결합니다.
- ◆ 문제를 푸는 도중 모르는 단어가 나오더라도 바로 사전을 찾지 말고 위쪽에 표시만 하고 계속 읽어 나갑니다.
⇒ 첫 번째 채점을 하고 난 다음 모르는 단어를 찾아 확인합니다. 새로 알게 된 단어들은 단어장을 만들어 정리해 둡니다.

Many parents who have children will make sure that their home is well suited for education. They will fill their home with plenty of books for their children. ① The home will also have several kinds of reference tools such as encyclopedias, magazines, computer, etc. ② In the home, there will be a quiet room that children can use to do their schoolwork. ③ Part of setting up a home dedicated to learning also includes limiting time for playing computer games throughout the week. ④ Although most parents care about their children, many haven't had access to the knowledge and resources they need. ⑤ As you can guess, those who have the parents providing a good environment for their children are the ones excelling at school.

Everyone knows that dogs make wonderful pets. But many dogs also have different _____. Some dogs, for example, are used by the police. Often these dogs help people in trouble or find people who are lost. Other dogs work at airports. They sniff out plants, food, and other things that people are not supposed to bring in from other countries. With their help, these things are found and never enter the country. Some other dogs help people keep their homes safe from harmful insects. Once the dogs find the insect nest with their sharp nose, people can have the insects and their nest removed.

If you are suffering from anorexia, you may feel afraid that once you start eating, you will not be able to stop. You are so hungry all the time that you feel as if you could eat and eat and never stop. This doesn't actually happen, and you will soon discover that you _____. When I was first anorexic, I planned to give myself just one day off from my diet. During this day, I allowed myself to eat anything I wanted. I started the day by eating some cookies and was certain that I could easily eat a whole bag because I craved them so strongly. I'd only had three cookies before finding myself feeling sick and full. I could not believe what was happening. I had been so certain that I would not be able to control my cravings.

What would it be ① like if library books weren't put into any kind of order? You probably wouldn't be able to find the book you ② wanted. That is why library books are organized. Most public libraries separate books for children and teens from books for adults. That way, children, teens, and adults can find the books they want ③ easier. Most libraries also separate fiction books from nonfiction books. Fiction books are alphabetized by the author's last name. So if you are looking for a children's fiction book, begin by ④ going to the children's section. Next, look for the fiction books in that section. Finally, search alphabetically for the last name of the author, ⑤ and you will likely find the book.

Secrets are gifts of trust, given to you for safekeeping. They are given to you because you have earned the confider's trust, the heart of all great relationships. Keep those confidences, and the relationship will deepen. Reveal them, and you will slowly watch remarkable things happen. Suppose that you reveal a confidence. Now the person to whom you have revealed it knows you are not to be trusted. He has several close friends, and to them he reveals your betrayal. They spread the word further to others, who do the same. Betrayals spread like viruses. The words themselves suggest something here. Everyone knows what biology is because we have all studied it in high school. Literally, it means the study of life. However, if you were asked what biotechnology is, what answer would you give?

- (A) For example, we can use our knowledge to take vegetables and grow larger ones which have more nutrition and better flavor. It can be also used to recycle and treat waste, and clean sites contaminated by industrial activities.
- (B) At its simplest, it is technology based on biology. It takes the knowledge that we get from our study of biology and adapts the knowledge to our own needs and to those of the earth around us.
- (C) Such a statement above may sound a little bit ambiguous. More specifically, biotechnology is applying biological knowhow technologically to biological functions in order to help improve our lives and the health of our Earth.

Not only is it easy to lie with maps, but it's also essential. A map must distort reality in order to portray a complex and three-dimensional world on a flat sheet of paper. To take a simple example, a map uses a strict scale, but the symbols it uses for parks, restaurants, and other places aren't drawn to the same scale. Furthermore, a map can't show everything. If it tries to contain everything in it, it will probably hide critical information in a fog of detail. As a result, the map cannot help but _____. There's no escape point from the cartographic paradox: to present a useful and truthful picture, an accurate map must tell white lies.

The human mind is a remarkable instrument with a great capacity for memory and creative thought. However, often small, temporary items, those that exist solely in short-term memory, don't get the chance to stick to the mind. It has been proven that short-term memory can manage a maximum of about seven items at a time. Therefore, if you have more than seven tasks to perform today or seven items to buy at a store, you will most likely forget a few ones unless you write them down. Make notes. Making notes is never wrong whether it's during a meeting, an interview, or immediately afterward. Whenever you find yourself trying to remember something that you had the opportunity to write down earlier, you may be losing an important opportunity and time.

Early native Americans had to make everything they needed. ① The kinds of things each tribe used to make tools, clothing, toys, shelter, and food depended upon what they found around them. ② Also, the things they made fit their life style. ③ Most tribes spoke their own language, but could communicate with other tribes. ④ For example, the people of the Plains, who traveled a lot, didn't make clay pots. ⑤ Pots were too heavy and broke too easily when they were moved, so they made containers from animal skins.

When my son Tony was young, I purchased a model car for children at Christmas. When Tony opened the box, I reviewed the rather difficult instructions and I thought Tony was too young to figure out how to put together this new toy. So, I immediately decided I could get the job done quicker by using my wisdom and skill. Just as I started, my wife came to the back door, looked at the car, and offered me some very valuable advice. The biggest trap many family gardeners fall into is creating a garden that is too large. Even though you may have the best of intentions, over time a garden that is too large will become a maintenance nightmare. My family, like many others, eagerly planted large gardens only to cut back slowly on the time devoted to gardening. Sometime in September, we ended up with a garden full of overripened fruit and out-of-control, overgrown plants. This situation is not enjoyable for adult gardeners, let alone for children. Most children (and many adults) won't enjoy spending their warm sunny days tending an overgrown garden plot. When thinking about the size of your family garden, be _____. Plan the size according to the time your family can devote to the garden.

When we think of the word "leader," we are often reminded of such powerful personalities as Martin Luther, Abraham Lincoln, Winston Churchill, or Nelson Mandela. That's very unfortunate, because we can wrongly feel that unless we are innately a gifted speaker, brilliant scholar, or spiritual giant, we cannot lead. Nothing could be further from the truth. They weren't inborn leaders. In an article published in The Last Day's Newsletter in 2013, a story is told by Leonard Ravenhill that a group of tourists visiting a beautiful village saw an old man sitting by a fence. One of the visitors asked, "Were any great men born in this village?" Without looking up, the old man replied, "No, only newborn babies." Isn't that true? The greatest leaders were once newborn babies. The truth is that leaders are made, not born. Leadership can be developed just like any other ability.

When I was living in Germany over 50 years ago, the prevalent view there was that a child should be left to cry, and that it was ① harmful to attend to a child that cried "without reason." Studies showed that, when a German infant cried, its crying was ② ignored on the average of one out of three times, or else the parent responded only after an interval of between 10 and 30 minutes. German infants were left ③ alone in a crib for a long time, while the mother went out shopping or was working in another room. The magic words for German parents were that children should acquire self-reliance as quickly as possible. German parents considered American children ④ well-behaved, because American parents attended quickly to a child's crying. German parents were afraid that too ⑤ much attention would make a child rude.

For the last 20 years, some educators have believed that children should not be allowed to experience failure. Educational situations were structured so that every child could be successful nearly all the time. It was reasoned that the experience of failure would discourage students from future study. In the field of science, however, finding out what does not work is as important as finding out what does. In fact, real advances in science tend to occur when _____. Although students should not be constantly faced with frustrating learning situations, a positive attitude toward failure may better serve them in developing problem-solving skills. After all, in much of scientific inquiry, there are no right or wrong answers.

Compared to past generations, we are quite well off. In the past fifty years, the average buying power has more than tripled. We own a lot of electronic devices that are designed to make our lives easier, but still, as sociologists are eager to point out, there is no end to the list of things to do in our daily lives. We work as hard as our grandparents did, and the result is flawlessness but not freedom. The curtain edges are free of dirt, the picture hooks on the wall are firmly in place, and our eggs come out just the way we like them. The more we have, the more we want. The result is an apparent scarcity of time, a dilemma that Changes in factors other than a good's price—such as consumers' income—will influence the ①decisions of consumers to purchase a good. An increase in consumer income makes it possible for consumers to purchase ②more goods. If you were to win the lottery, or if your boss were to give you a raise, you would respond by ③decreasing your spending on some products. On the other hand, when the economy goes bad, falling incomes and rising unemployment cause consumers to ④reduce their purchases of many items. A change in consumer income will result in consumers buying more or less of a product at all possible prices. When consumer income increases, in the case of most goods, individuals will purchase more of the good even if the price is ⑤unchanged.

It is well known to anyone waiting in line in a cafe that a person is paying more attention to his personal gadget such as a smartphone or MP3 player than to the person serving him. However, we shouldn't blame technology for this habit. ① Technology is here to help us, and it's we that should allow it to take over our lives. ② We've programed ourselves to think that every new message signal brings life-changing news, so taking and checking our text messages and emails takes precedence over talking to the people we are with. ③ On the other hand, people are more likely to use text messages than emails when they have to let others know what happens to them. ④ To break this unnecessary habit, we need to set aside specific times, when we're not in the presence of others, to check our messages. ⑤ This way, we'll still be in touch with the world and be able to give concentrated attention to our family, friends, and business partners.

In general, there are two major styles of practice when it comes to medicine. In the past, the relationship between the doctors and patients was mostly paternalistic. In other words, doctors acted in a "father knows best" fashion.

- (A) The doctor's task in this case is not to tell what to do but to educate the patient about various treatment options. Ultimately, the doctor allows his patients to reach an informed decision about their own health conditions.
- (B) The other style of medical practice can be described as informative. As the paternalistic style slowly goes out of favor with the general public, the informative style is gradually taking hold as the more common type of doctor-patient relationship.

(C) In this type of relationship, the doctor told what needed to be done, and the patient followed it without asking a lot of questions. This style of medicine allowed only for one-way communication.

Several animal species help other injured animals survive. Dolphins need to reach the surface of the water to breathe. If a dolphin is wounded so severely that it cannot swim to the surface by itself, other dolphins group themselves under it, pushing it upward to the air. If necessary, they will keep doing this for several hours. The same kind of thing happens among elephants. A fallen elephant is likely to have difficulty breathing because of its own weight, or it may overheat in the sun. Many elephant experts have reported that when an elephant falls down, other members of the group try to raise it to its feet.

It's important that the worlds of adults and children be separate. ① In other words, adults should be involved primarily with other adults, not with children; and children, likewise, should be involved primarily with other children, not adults. ② The more adults become involved with children, the more children want to be involved with adults and the less able adults are to distinguish themselves. ③ Adults who fail to distinguish themselves reap what they sow—their children try to control them instead of coming to respect them. ④ So adults need to establish a close relationship with children, which is good for each other. ⑤ Unfortunately, if adults fail to properly take care of their children, the children suffer far more than the adults.

In order to do that, they used to hold their weapon with their right hand, putting their left hand in a position to keep the heart safe.

Scientists have tried for a long time to explain why 85-90% of people are right-handed.

① They've known cultures play an important role in it, but they also know it is not the whole story. ② Some scientists say that we are right-handed because our prehistoric ancestors believed their heart was on their left side. ③ According to the theory, they learned very early that their heart was the most important organ of their body, so they needed to protect their heart when fighting against opponents. ④ Used in this way, the right hand developed abilities to change its position quickly and easily, compared to the left hand. ⑤ Finally, these abilities were passed down through the

Some good qualities are produced over a long period of time. Some satisfactions are more lasting than others. Easily acquired possessions are usually the least permanent, for working hard usually builds up larger amounts of endurance, intelligence, and insight. Try to avoid the six-week course that promises to prepare you for any job. It is impossible to build up intellectual ability in a short time. It is similar to adapting yourself to the football field by doing a single work-out in the gym. If one is really serious and desires enduring success, he must _____. Those who make every effort to learn things from the beginning and to acquire the minutest details can enjoy really lasting success.

Gene Calvert, author of Highwire Management, offers a number of specific actions that leaders can take to make others feel ①safe. For example, he suggests checking whether people feel ready for the new assignment and ②asking them how best to support their management of the risks involved. He also suggests encouraging them to ask for help whenever they need ③it and holding informal, face-to-face meetings. Another valuable suggestion he offers ④is to provide others with the flexibility to handle any risk in their own way—unless this leads them in ways that are harmful to them. It's also important not to punish people when they've done their best under the circumstances, no matter ⑤how the situation is like.

If your car were to break down and your cell phone had no service, where do you think you would have a better chance of getting assistance—a country road or a busy street? To be sure, more people will see you on the busy street. On the country road, you might have to wait a long time before someone comes by. That's why you may think you're more likely to get assisted on a busy street. However, studies show you have a better chance on a country road. Why? Have you ever seen someone's car broken down on the side of the busy street and thought, "I could give the man a hand, but I'm sure someone will be along."? Yes. Though it is hard to believe, almost everyone thinks just like that on a busy street. As a result, nobody comes to help him and no one stops. In a crowd, your inclination to rush to someone's aid fades, as if diluted by the potential of the group. Everyone thinks someone is going to eventually do something, but with everyone waiting together, no one does.

One morning I threw a banana peel into a trash basket. As I removed the lid of the basket, my nose was attacked by the unpleasant smell of rotten food. "How disgusting!" I thought as I quickly replaced the lid. Then it occurred to me that rot is an essential process of nature. Rot is a great force that never stops moving. It slowly decays whatever is dying or dead. If it didn't, however, we might mistake garbage for good food, eat it, get sick, and perhaps die. Without rot, leaves and other dead things would pile up, miles high. New plants couldn't grow. The truth is that without rot the whole world could die. The great wisdom of the universe has built this safeguard into the system of our well-being.

Every living thing has what scientists call a biological clock that controls behavior. The biological clock tells plants when to form flowers and when the flowers should open. It tells insects when to breed and fly away. It tells animals when to eat, sleep and wake. When winter nears, some birds migrate to a region with a warmer climate. Their biological clocks tell them it is time to do all of these things. Humans, like other animals, have a biological clock that tells them when to sleep and eat. It causes other changes, too. It controls our body temperature, blood pressure, heartbeat, and the release of some hormones.

Natural boundaries between states or countries are found along rivers, lakes, deserts, and mountain ranges. Among them, river boundaries would seem to be ideal: they provide clear separation, and they are established and recognized physical features. In reality, however, river boundaries can change as rivers change course. Following flooding, a river's course may shift, altering the boundary between states or countries. For example, the Rio Grande, separating the United States and Mexico, has frequently shifted its course, causing problems in determining the exact location of the international boundary.

The inclusion of statistics, even when they're meaningless, can signal expertise. I found evidence for this in our study of advertising effectiveness. I showed one group of subjects a series of real magazine ads that featured statistical information arguing for their product. One ad, for example, was for a breakfast cereal that contained "60% of the minimum daily requirement of calcium, 90% iron, and 100% folic acid." I showed other subjects the same ads, but this time we removed the statistics. When we asked subjects about their own impressions of the advertised products, it didn't much matter which version of the ad they've seen—either version of the ad, they said, persuaded them. More revealing was what subjects said about how other people would be affected. Those exposed to the ads with statistics, they believed, would be much more likely to buy the product. If you've ever visited a fortune-teller you probably came away amazed at the things they knew about you—things no one else could possibly have known. So it must be a supernatural power, right? Research into the fortune-telling business shows that fortune-tellers use a technique known as "cold reading," which can produce an accuracy of around 80 percent when "reading" a person you've never met. While it can appear magical to some people, it is simply a process based on the careful observation of body-language signals plus an understanding of human nature and a knowledge of probability statistics. It's a technique practiced by tarot-card readers, astrologers, and palm readers to gather information about a "client."

Sometimes children may want to do more than they are capable of doing. For example, the five-year-old son of a friend of ours went on a hike with his father. At one point the boy asked his father to let him carry a heavy backpack the way the "big people" do. Without saying a word, the father took his backpack off and handed it to his son, who immediately discovered that it was too heavy for him to carry. The boy simply exclaimed, "Dad, it's too heavy for me." He then went happily on his way up the trail. In a safe way the father had allowed his son to discover experientially that he was, indeed, too small. He had also avoided a potential argument with his son.

Americans have traditionally thought of independence and individualism as important factors in their lives. They believe the two factors are helpful for both parents and children. Parents try to instill these values in their children from an early age. ① In the United States, for example, it is common for parents to put their newborn baby in a separate room when the child is only a few weeks old. ② The main reason for separating children physically soon after birth is to preserve parents' privacy. ③ By having their own rooms, children will also be able to have privacy when they get older. ④ Some researchers claim that children with an independent space are more likely to suffer from depression. ⑤ In addition, the children will learn to be responsible for their own living space.

The monarch butterfly's caterpillars have some physical characteristics that make them noticeable to their predators. Any bird that ate a monarch caterpillar would be so ill that it would never touch another. The monarch caterpillars feed on milkweed plants. Many children are so hungry for attention at home that they seek attention, no matter what the cost, at school. They figure any attention, even negative attention, is desirable. Most parents scold their children when they tell lies, but all children grow up to become liars anyway. This is because being able to tell a good lie in certain circumstances is an important social skill. For example, if your friend asks you what you think of his or her new hair style and you don't like it, would you say so? Most people in this situation would probably tell a lie so as not to hurt their friend's feelings. It is certainly true that a person who is too honest is likely to have few friends. Scientists have found that pesticides harm the ability of bees to find food. Bees must learn which flowers contain nectar (their food) from the smell of the flowers. If the bees do not learn which scents mean food, they will starve. Researchers at the University of Dundee in Scotland and Newcastle University in England found that pesticides used by farmers and gardeners can switch off the part of a bee's brain that is responsible for associating smells with food. Lead researcher Dr. Geraldine Wright said pesticides could seriously impact the survival of honeybee colonies. She said, "Bees that cannot learn will not be able to find food." During my sophomore year in high school, I got sick with the flu and had to miss a few days of school. (a) When I returned, I was greeted with two essays to hand in and several tests to take. Even though I went home from school that day exhausted, I still had to stay up really late to accomplish everything. I thought it was all complete, but the next day at school, I got a rude awakening.

(B)

I decided to finish the test on my own after all! When I walked into the English room the next day, my pride of having been an honest soul changed to a wave of doom as I saw my test laying face down on my desk. I stared at it a few seconds before I got up the nerve to turn it over, expecting the inevitable F. However, the result was against my expectation. (b) I have never in my whole life been so happy to see my grade, a D-.

(C)

I'd totally forgotten to study for the test on Hamlet, which I had promised I'd take over my lunch hour. Because I was absent, I had missed out on the last two scenes of the play in class, which the rest of the class read together. When lunch time came, I went to the English room to face my certain doom. (c) All I could do was try to remember as much as I could, and guess on the questions I didn't know.

(D)

It was natural that I didn't know a majority of the questions. (d) I was just about to turn in my paper, when I snapped the lead on my pencil accidentally. I walked to the front of the room to the pencil sharpener. Sharpening my pencil, I looked down and there lay the answer sheet on the teacher's desk. My first thought was, 'Yes! Read over the answers quickly!' This was quickly followed by my conscience yelling, 'No! You'll get caught! Yes! No! Yes! No!' (e) This went on for ten of the longest seconds in my entire life.

Carl Rogers was born in Oak Park, Illinois, to a strictly Protestant family, and had few friends outside the family before going to college. Initially, Rogers majored in agriculture, but after marrying his childhood sweetheart, Helen Elliott, in 1924, he enrolled at a theological college, before withdrawing to pursue a course in psychology. Rogers worked at the universities of Ohio, Chicago, and Wisconsin, developing his client-centered therapy based on humanistic

Temporary structures such as giant domes and air-inflated plastic bubbles are appearing everywhere. They are pick-up-and-move structures flowing from the drawing boards of engineers and architects. In New York City, the Department of Parks has decided to build twelve "portable playgrounds"—small, temporary industrial playgrounds. They are to be built on vacant city lots until other uses are found for the land. There was a time when a playground was a permanent place in a neighborhood. An important idea developed in sixteenth-century England involved _____. During the reign of Queen Elizabeth I, there was an unprecedented relaxation of censorship laws for playwrights. While the government still claimed the right to strictly monitor all speeches, writers were rarely punished for overstepping the line. This new freedom of expression allowed Shakespeare to criticize the government in his plays. Shakespeare knew that even if his plays did manage to offend the queen's censors, he probably wouldn't be thrown into prison. Our choice of friends is based more on _____ than we might like to believe. For example, lovers like to think they have found the "one and only" person in the universe for them. In reality, they have probably found the best match in a 5-mile radius—or at least within driving distance! What this means is that marriages are not made in heaven—they are made in schools, businesses, and neighborhoods. There does seem to be a "boy-next-door" or "girl-next-door" effect in romantic attraction, and a "folks-next-door" effect in friendship. Mr. Beezley has been an elementary school teacher for many years, but teaching school in a small agricultural town in northwestern New Mexico is a new experience for him. Although he's been in town since early July, he hasn't attended any of the social events in the local community. By September, he's acquired a reputation as a cold and arrogant Easterner.

(B)

On one occasion early in the school year, Mr. Beezley was quite surprised to see a boy get out of his seat to help a classmate with an assignment. A few minutes later, two other boys left their seats to work with classmates. When he approached them, they continued to talk as if he weren't even there. He was shocked by their bold behavior. Back in Massachusetts, where he taught students, his presence alone was enough to silence any misbehaving students.

(C)

And that evening, he went to the home of one of his students and had dinner with several of his students' families. After dinner, when a neighbor's truck broke down, the entire group went to the man's aid. Two parents drove to town for needed parts. Several people held lights, and others offered occasional suggestions and strategies. Through the experiences, he discovered how different families often live very intermingled lives. Mr. Beezley finally feels comfortable enough with the others. He now realizes one of the aspects of Navajo culture that he was completely unaware of.

(D)

So he angrily snatched the assignments on which the two students had been collaborating and insisted they return to their seats. A few children were very upset by their teacher's reaction. A few days later, his students with their parents visited him after school. "Come ...," said one of the parents. "... and join us for dinner ...," added another. "... for it will give us a chance ...," continued a third. "... to get to know one another," finished a fourth. They talked as a collective group!

Global Car Color Popularity, 2013-2014

The pie charts above show the global car color popularity based on the data of cars manufactured in 2013 and 2014. ① The most popular car color in the world was White in both 2013 and 2014. ② Black and Silver tied for second place in popularity in 2013, but Black stood alone as the second most favorite color in 2014. ③ Gray fell slightly in popularity from 13 percent in 2013 to 12 percent in 2014. ④ In 2013 and 2014, Red and Blue remained the same in popularity at 9 percent and 7 percent, respectively. ⑤ Natural was less popular than Red in 2013, but this was reversed in 2014.

Have you heard the story about the drunk who misplaced his wallet and had to get drunk again to find it? Although this tale is often told as a joke, it is likely to be true. Being very thirsty might cause you to recall events that took place on another occasion when you were thirsty. Gordon Bower found that people who learned a list of words while in a happy mood, recalled them better when they were again happy. People who learned while they felt sad, recalled best when they were sad. Similarly, if you are in a happy mood, you are more likely to recall recent happy events. If you are in a bad mood, you will tend to have unpleasant memories. Couples who quarrel often end up remembering old arguments.

1. Pantodon buchholzi에 관한 다음 글의 내용과 일치하지 않는 것은?<sup>1)</sup>

The freshwater butterflyfish called Pantodon buchholzi is a creature living in swamps in West Africa. It is small, no more than 13 cm in length, with very large fins. The fins, directly behind its head on either side, resemble the wings of a butterfly. It is one of the few fish that can breathe the air, using its swim bladder, an internal organ filled with gas. It has large upturned eyes which are designed to see both down into the water and up into the air at the same time. As a result, it can see both above and below the water surface. This specialized hunter can float just beneath the boundary between the water and the air. Its eyes are constantly trained to capture small prey along the water surface. Pantodon buchholzi feeds mostly on insects, though it consumes smaller fish that it finds on the water surface. Pantodon buchholzi can jump out of the water to catch its prey or to escape from predators.

Consider a study of the power of social standards, involving nearly three hundred households in San Marcos, California. All of the households were informed about how much energy they had used in previous weeks; they were also given information about the average use of energy by households in their neighborhood. The effects on behavior were both clear and striking. In the following weeks, the above-average energy users greatly decreased their energy use; the below-average energy users greatly increased their energy use. The latter finding is called a boomerang effect, and it offers an important warning. A good belly laugh is a kind of exercise that increases the amount of oxygen in the blood and releases special chemicals in the brain. Laughter provides exercise. When people laugh, their stomach muscles tighten and move. Laughter also causes a person's heart rate to increase, and he or she begins to breathe harder. That means the person is getting exercise. In fact, laughing 100 times a day is equal to 10 minutes of rowing. In addition, laughing increases oxygen in a person's blood. When people laugh, they breathe more deeply and breathe in more oxygen. The oxygen goes to all of the organs in the body and helps them work better. This means that food is digested better and the heart pumps blood better, too.

The word 'fulfillment' does not even appear in the famous dictionary, A Dictionary of the English Language, published in 1755. For centuries, most people of the Western world were busy struggling to meet their basic needs. The pizza delivery man delivers your pizza 30 minutes late. Do you think that he was late because he was lazy? Or do you think he was late because he got stuck in traffic? When it comes to explaining why the pizza arrived cold, you're likely to blame the pizza delivery man, not the traffic conditions. What about the times you arrive late for an appointment? Are you likely to reach the same judgments about your own behavior as you do when explaining the behavior of others? Of course not. When we arrive late, we are less likely to blame ourselves than we are to blame others who arrive late. If someone is late for work because they missed the bus, we tend to think of them as lazy, and we think they should have been at the bus stop earlier. It's a chilly day and the shopper is a woman. What does that tell us? It says that she's carrying a handbag, and that she's wearing a coat. But she has only two hands, and she's shopping with one. If she selects something, the free hand carries it. Now she's down to no hands and her shopping is virtually over. To solve this problem, we suggested that all employees be trained to offer baskets to any customer holding three or more items. Management accepted the suggestion. Pocket gophers include several species that range across the western half of the United States. They prefer habitats where the earth is soft and easy to dig in, and they spend most of their time underground. As many as seven young are born in the spring. Their bodies are fur covered except for a short thick tail. Gophers eat roots and other parts of plants they encounter while digging underground.

This is not the case for people who live in the suburbs.

For the most part, people who live or work in cities walk throughout the day—to go from the parking lot to the office, to shop, and to run errands. ① It's often easier and cheaper to walk a few blocks than to wait for a taxi or subway. ② In this way, exercise can be structured into the daily routine. ③ Because the suburbs are spread out, it's too far to walk to the office or run to the store. ④ Walking to the bus stop used to provide at least some movement, but now most public transportation is limited, so suburban people drive everywhere. ⑤ The price they pay is limited physical movement during the day.

A good place for business leaders to start the process of building trust is by becoming more _____ to their employees. Getting out of the office and mixing with employees is a simple solution to a very common trust problem. In organizational improvement workshops, we often ask, "What is the single greatest barrier to improving communication and trust between you and your manager?" In many cases, the first response is, "I never see her. She's always in a meeting." The employees cannot develop a perception of trust with higher-ups when some don't even know what they look like.
