One of the most important skills you can develop in human relations is the ability to _____. It's one of the keys to satisfying customers, maintaining a marriage, and raising children. All human interactions are improved by the ability to put yourself in another person's shoes. How? Look beyond yourself, your own interests, and your own world. When you work to examine a problem in the light of another's history and discover the interests and concerns of others, you begin to see what others see. And that is a powerful thing.

Many people want to live near a beach.

- ① Coastal areas in the United States and around the world experienced enormous population growth in the late 20th century.
 ② About fifty percent of the U.S. population can now drive to a beautiful coastline in less than an hour. ③ There have been tsunamis and hurricanes taking hundreds of thousands of lives. ④ To make matters worse, rising global sea levels means that these hazards will not only continue but also grow worse over the next century. ⑤ Man-made structures along coastlines can also make the hazards more serious.

A miser tries to save his money. But he is failing to utilize what he owns. If he were to realize how he is limiting his true wealth, he would hasten to find some worthy person or institution that would benefit from a portion of his fortune. The part that he gives away might seem to diminish the size of his fortune. However, in reality what he gives away remains his eternal possession. And the true size of his fortune is calculated by what he gives and not by what he keeps. Some people use the expression, "He is worth 'X' amount of money." They usually refer to a person's money and property that has not yet been given away. The expression would be more accurate if the calculations included _____.

- ① the pleasure of saving money
- ② what one has donated to others
- ③ the current value of one's property
- ④ the money coming from investments
- ⑤ what one has lost from hasty decisions

Suppose that you can choose only one item from a selection of desserts that includes pecan ice cream, doughnuts, chocolate chip cookies, and cheese cake. Select one of these at random—say, pecan ice cream. Then, out of all the other desserts, identify the one that you like best out of that group. In my case, it'd be chocolate chip cookies. My decision about which dessert to eat now is made by simply ____ (A) ____ how I feel about pecan ice cream with how I feel about chocolate chip cookies. To select the ice cream means not being able to eat the chocolate chip cookies. I'll do that only if the pleasure from eating the ice cream ____ (B) ____ the loss of giving up the chocolate chip cookies.

Remember the basic rule that people will not sacrifice their sense of self-importance when changing to your view. Therefore, in talking with people, don't begin by discussing the things on which you differ. Begin by emphasizing ①which you agree on. Get the other person ②to say "Yes" from the beginning. When a person says "No," all his pride of personality demands that he remain ③consistent with himself. So it is very important ④that a person be started in the affirmative direction. For example, a skillful speaker gets, from the beginning, a number of "Yes" responses. This sets the psychological process of the listeners ⑤moving in the affirmative direction.

Not unlike drugs or alcohol, the experience of watching television allows the participant to forget the real world and enter into a pleasurable and passive mental state. To be sure, other experiences, notably reading, also provide a temporary rest from reality. But it's much easier to stop reading and return to reality than to stop watching television. The entry into another world offered by reading includes _____. The entry via television does not. In this respect, television viewing is more like drinking or taking drugs—once you start, it's hard to stop.

Too often we think that our children misbehave on purpose. Instead of being quick to blame, choose the high road and assume your child _____. If your child has drawn a picture on your wall with his crayons, for example, maybe he is just trying to decorate the wall beautifully and make you happy; he is not necessarily making you annoyed. And if you label his behavior as such, your child will take it to heart and often come to believe it himself. Then you have real problems. In addition to recognizing his best purposes, redirect your child's energy to more appropriate behavior—drawing on an easel rather than on your walls, for example.

It is very important to help poor countries, but it's not simple. We should be giving money or food directly to the poor in emergencies like an earthquake or flood. In less emergent situations, however, providing food can make people dependent. If a developed country gives food to a poor country, its local farmers will find it difficult to produce food to sell. We need to help poor people to earn their own money, or to produce their own food. Just giving them money or food is not a good idea. We have to find a way to help them stand on their own two feet.

The human voice can now open doors, even without saying, "Open sesame." Locks that require no keys are opened by the sound of a person's voice. A compact unit with a built-in microphone is installed near the door. The unit is programmed to respond only to the owner's voice. To open the lock, the person punches in an ID number and says a password. In half a second, the unit determines whether the voice is the right one, and if it is, it opens the door. What makes this sort of lock workable and secure is that people's voices are _____. No one trying to imitate the owner's voice will be able to fool the unit, because each voice pattern cannot be duplicated. It also won't respond to a recording; it can distinguish a real voice from a recorded one.

Dear Mr. Brown,

I'm writing this letter to express my dissatisfaction with the notice of rent increase. As you know, I have lived in this apartment for the last ten years and the lease has been renewed five times. The rent has risen by a reasonable amount until now. Fifty percent, though, is absolute nonsense, and I'm not prepared to pay such a large increase. It is wrong to ask me to pay such a large increase in a short period of time. In fact, I don't think this apartment deserves such a high rent. The plumbing is quite old and the elevators are out of order often. Please reconsider your decision and reply at your earliest convenience.

When you skip breakfast, you are like a car trying to run without fuel. Experts say that a nutritious breakfast is the brain's fuel. A brain that is fully fueled concentrates better and solves problems faster. Some students say that getting a few extra minutes of sleep is more important than eating a bowl of oatmeal, but they're wrong. Of course, sleeping is important, but going to bed a half-hour earlier would be better than sleeping late and skipping breakfast. (A)

My husband David called me on my cell phone the week before our daughter's wedding and said, "We have a problem." He told me that the electric company announced a future power outage in our neighborhood to allow for a major repair. The real problem was that we were going to have the power outage on the day of the wedding.

(B)

So we got up early on Sunday morning, and found a generator parked right outside of our house—it was (a) her solution. That's right—our house was connected to electricity all day from our own private generator while the rest of the neighborhood had a blackout! It was amazing. Rosa made it clear that our happiness was important to (b) her as well. There are truly people with big hearts. Kindness is still alive.

(C)

I called the electric company to ask, or rather to beg, them to put off the repair work since we really, really needed our house to prepare for the wedding (makeup, hair, etc.). I was immediately transferred to a manager named Rosa. She understood the problem and explained that they absolutely couldn't reschedule the power outage, but (c) she would see what she could do.

Two days later, Rosa called to say that they could not let only our house keep its electricity. Then she said, "We can let you use a room in our company's building." I was surprised and asked if (d) she had ever done that. She said, "Actually, it's happened before." The next day, Rosa called again in a happy voice and said that she had found a solution.

She told me that my daughter would be able to use electricity and prepare for (e) her wedding at home.

Detective work is a two-part process. First, a detective must find the clues. But the clues alone don't solve the case.

- (A) The same sort of process takes place in reading. You need to look for clues and then draw conclusions based on those clues.
- (B) What is the writer trying to say? Good conclusions come from good observations. To be a better reader, be more like Sherlock Holmes: be more observant.
- (C) The detective must also draw conclusions based on those clues. These conclusions are also called inferences. Inferences are conclusions based on reasons, facts, or evidence.

Once in a street I came upon a little child of six or seven. It was past ten o'clock, and this child stood on the narrow pavement crying bitterly. "What is the matter?" I asked as kindly as my throat would allow. "I'm so hungry," said the child. I felt extremely upset. There was no false pretence in her voice. She said she and her mother lived near a church. Her mother had gone out to sell the last blanket, and the child was so hungry. The child's voice speaking like this was more terrible than all the suffering of mankind. After leaving the poor girl, I discovered that I had been so choked with emotion.

Dear Laura,

I have turned the corner, and I am starting to feel like myself again. It has been quite a strain being ill for so long, but I am hopeful now that I can begin to return to my life and friends. I cannot tell you how frightening it was when I received the initial lung cancer diagnosis. You and other friends were so quick to come to my side. I could not have come this far without the help I received from the wonderful people in my life. I am truly blessed to have friends like you.

Sincerely,

Donna

My son, Justin, was five years old and this was his first Easter Egg Hunt. All the children gathered behind the starting line, a yellow ribbon, waiting to begin. When the ribbon was cut, they all started running, except for Justin. "Run," I shouted, "run, Justin, hurry." But (a)he paid no attention to me.

(B)

Then I saw Justin bend over and it looked like (b)he had found an egg. He turned and waved his hand at me. Then once more he picked up something. Within five minutes, all the eggs seemed to have been found and the children were heading back to the starting line to show their mothers what they had found. Some had one egg, some had two, and a few even had three.

(C)

He was about one hundred feet behind the rest of the kids who were racing madly, looking for the hidden eggs. "Oh, (c)he won't get a thing," I said to my sister who was standing beside me. Her son, Danny, was one of the first of the children to be at the head. (d)He was running quickly with other children.

At that time I saw Justin heading my way. (e)His bag was full! When he opened it, we counted twelve eggs! All the other children, in their haste, had run right past these eggs, but not Justin. He had just slowly walked along picking up the eggs the other children had run past. Sometimes, I learned then, our kids do better when we don't push them hard.

People are more likely to do what they say when there are plenty of witnesses. Most of us want to be respected and well thought of, so when our promises are made public we make more efforts to keep our word. Making our promises public increases opportunities for support from our peers. One way to make a promise public is by announcing the promises, commitments, or agreements at a meeting or posting a display on a bulletin board. Then everyone can tell at a glance how things are going. A public announcement or display encourages people to talk and act in support of the goal.

One way to overcome our fear of writing is to accept the fact that there is no such thing as perfect writing. Even if it should exist, there would be critics to find fault with it. Yet this does not mean that we should ignore the needs of the reader. Rather, we need, for the moment, to ignore all concerns of criticism and desires to impress and just start writing. Just as a 10-year-old learns to swim by overcoming the hesitation to jump into the pool, we as writers must dive into the pool of ideas we want to express. No one can ever learn to ski without going down the mountain. We can't learn to skydive without leaving the plane.

Archimedes was a Greek scientist. He was born a long time ago. The year was 287 B.C. He was born in Syracuse. Syracuse was a city on the island of Sicily. Many of the things we know about science today started with Archimedes. He studied force. He said, "Give me a place to stand, and I'll move the world." His friend, the king, did not believe it. The king said, "I know you cannot prove it. You cannot prove it because you do not have a place to stand. But show me if you can move my ship. My ship is big. It has three masts. It is very heavy. My slaves pull hard. They strain at the ropes. Still, they cannot move my heavy ship." People heard about the king's _____. Could one man move the ship? People came from all over the city to watch. The docks were crowded. The people looked at the ship. They looked at the three masts. Then they looked at Archimedes. Archimedes set up pulleys. When you combine a wheel with a rope, you have a pulley. A pulley is used to lift or move things. A single pulley would have given Archimedes the pull of two people. Archimedes knew how much force he would need to move the ship. He knew how many pulleys to use. He set the pulleys up to a thing that looked like a big screw. The screw was attached to the dock. It was attached so it could not move. It had a handle. Archimedes turned the handle. He only used one hand. The crowd laughed. Then they looked in wonder. The heavy ship was moving. Archimedes was not pulling hard. The king said, "I command that Archimedes should be believed in anything he says!"

At my high school graduation, the awards were presented for achievement, contribution to the school, the community, and more. I sat with no interest through the awards ceremony. The Chaplain's award, the most honorable one, was supposed to be given to the student who most embodied the school motto, "The Way, The Truth, and The Life." I loved that motto and knew it would define my life. The headmaster read the list of qualities this year's candidate had—most giving, and contributed most to civic activities. I didn't care about the things that were said, knowing they were not for me. Then I heard the most familiar name, my name, called. I couldn't believe it! I walked to the stage to receive the award, crying. I thought I would never ask for anything other than the joy of this moment.

Dr. John Ross was well-known for helping his patients. Many of his patients were poor farmers, and they could not always afford to pay Dr. Ross's small fee. The good doctor would accept vegetables, eggs, or even a simple "thank you" in payment. One winter afternoon, he went to a house to see a child with a fever. The girl's family had run out of the firewood they needed to keep their tiny house warm. Dr. Ross grabbed a spare blanket from his car and told the father to bathe his daughter's forehead with cool water. Then Dr. Ross left to take care of other patients. After setting a broken leg, delivering a baby, and cleaning an infected finger, he returned to the sick child's house with a load of firewood. He built a fire for the little girl and her family.

When the curtain closes at any stage theater, the audience burst into applause. It's usually a few clappers who hesitantly start on their own, and then others join in. Applause is a funny thing in which each person tries to praise the performers, but also tries to blend into the crowd; you don't want to clap before everyone else, or to go on after others have stopped. In fact, there is a pattern in the way an audience goes from silence to full volume of applause. Recordings at theaters around the world show that different crowds all follow one universal curve showing how the sound rises over several seconds. This curve describes how a group of people collectively go from one kind of behavior to another, because what one does depends very strongly on _____.

Luckily a profound experience of intimacy is always accessible to us—all it requires is that we turn around and move toward life.

Our essential hunger is not for food but for intimacy. ① When intimacy is missing in our lives, we feel isolated from other beings, alone, and unloved in the world. ② So we habitually look to other people to fulfill our needs for intimacy. ③ However, our partners and friends cannot always be there for us in the way we need. ④ Such a change will require courage. ⑤ We have to intentionally open our senses, becoming deliberately aware of what is going on both inside our body and mind, and also outside, in our environment.

Sadhu Sundar Singh lived in India and worked among the people of Tibet. Once while traveling through the Himalayas, (a)he and his companion were caught in a terrible snowstorm. From time to time the snowstorm would stop for a moment, only to blow even harder afterward. After a moment, they found themselves on the edge of a steep hill and thirty feet below them lay the body of a traveler who had clearly fallen from the path.

(B)

Going down the mountainside, he dragged the fallen man back to the path. Then placing him on his shoulders, (b)he began the long slow journey to Ranget. It was growing colder. The man on his shoulders was almost frozen to death. If Sundar Singh fell, they both would die in the snowstorm. Only if he kept moving could they hope to survive. Hours passed. Sundar Singh noticed that he was no longer aware of the cold.

(C)

In fact, the work of carrying the man on his shoulders was warming his body and causing him to breathe. On and on, (c)he slowly made his way. As darkness was falling, he saw the entrance of the city in the distance. He had made it; they were saved! In that moment he found a form half-buried in the falling snow, and it was his companion who had gone on without him. He had frozen to death. Suddenly Sundar Singh realized the truth—by saving the stranger (d)he had saved himself!

Sundar Singh began making preparations to climb down to rescue him. His companion couldn't believe it. (e)He said, "We have to take care of ourselves. The city of Ranget is a long way off. If we try to save this stranger, all three of us will be lost." "We can't leave him here to die. The two of us can save him." Sundar Singh said. His companion shook his head, "It is impossible. If you are foolish enough to risk your life, that is your business. I am going to save myself." So saying, his companion walked away and Sundar Singh was left alone.
